

Contributors

Elisabeth Blum teaches philosophy at Loyola University Maryland in Baltimore. She published about Avicenna's concept of matter and other topics of medieval and Renaissance philosophy. Recently she translated Giordano Bruno's Spaccio de la bestia trionfante into German (forthcoming). A book of fiction, Von Dickköpfen, Vagabunden und Engeln, was published in 2003.

Paul Richard Blum is T. J. Higgins Chair of Philosophy at Loyola University Maryland in Baltimore. Most recently he has published Philosophieren in der Renaissance (2004). He edited the volume Philosophers of the Renaissance (forthcoming).

Gábor Boros is head of the Department of Modern and Contemporary Philosophy at Eötvös University in Budapest, Hungary. He is mainly interested in topics of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century philosophy as well as ethics and the philosophy of emotions. His books include Heilsfragment. Rekonstruktion der Spinozanischen Ethik (1990) and René Descartes' Werdegang. Der allgütige Gott und die wertfreie Natur (2001). Most recently, with Herman De Dijn and Martin Moors, he coedited The Concept of Love in 17th and 18th Century Philosophy (2008).

Roland Breuer teaches modern philosophy at the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven (Belgium). His major interests are modern French philosophy (Descartes to Fénelon) and contemporary phenomenological thought.

Jianhong Chen is currently associate professor of philosophy at Nankai University, Tianjin, and is particularly interested in political philosophy and theories of religion. He has published articles and books on Leo Strauss, Carl Schmitt, Thomas Hobbes, and Plato.

William Desmond is professor of philosophy at the Institute of Philosophy at the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven, and David Cook Visiting Chair at Villanova University. He is author of many books, including Being and the Between (winner of the Priz Cardinal Mercier, and the J. N. Findlay Award), Ethics and the Between (2001), and most recently God and the Between (2008). He was also past president of the Hegel Society of America (1990–1992), of the Metaphysical Society of America (1994–1995), and of the American Catholic Philosophical Association (2008–2009). His work spans metaphysics, ethics, aesthetics, and the philosophy of religion.

Patrick R. Frierson is an associate professor of philosophy at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Washington. He is the author of Freedom and Anthropology in Kant's Moral Philosophy (2003) and numerous articles on Kant, Adam Smith, and Descartes. He teaches a variety of courses on topics in ethics, modern philosophy, Kant, and nineteenth-century philosophy.

Michael Funk Deckard is assistant professor of philosophy at Lenoir-Rhyne University (North Carolina). His research and teaching include aesthetics, early modern philosophy, ethics, the relationship of science and religion, and hermeneutics.

Dorottya Kaposi completed her PhD in 2007 at the University of Paris–Sorbonne (Paris IV) and at ELTE University (Budapest). Her dissertation treated the Cartesian doctrine of the will and the problem of individuality. She is a teaching fellow at ELTE University in Budapest and teaches modern philosophy and ethics. In 2006, Kaposi was the first secretary of the thirty-first international conference of the Association des Sociétés de Philosophie de Langue Française (ASPLF) in Budapest.

Péter Losonczi teaches philosophy and religious studies at the University of West Hungary (Szombathely). His fields of research are early modern and contemporary philosophy of religion, history of philosophy, inter-religious dialogue, and the so-called postsecular context. Some publications include Reflecting Diversity: Historical and Thematical Perspectives in the Jewish and Christian Tradition (coedited with Géze Xeravits, 2008), Religio Academici: Essays on Scepticism, Religion and the Pursuit of Knowledge (coedited with András Szigeti and Miklós Vassányi) and the forthcoming From Political Theory to Political Theology (coedited with Aakash Singh).

Tamás Pavlovits is associate professor in the Department of Philosophy at the University of Szeged, Hungary. He specializes in seventeenth-century French philosophy, ethics and moral philosophy, philosophy of religion, and metaphysics. In 2003 he defended his PhD dissertation titled “The Force of Reason in Pascal” at the University of Paris–Sorbonne (Paris IV). In 1999 he translated into Hungarian and edited Pascal’s short writings and correspondence. He has coedited two collections of articles with Chantal Jaquet: Les significations du „corps” dans la philosophie classique (2004), and Les facultés de l’âme à l’âge classique (2006). His book titled Le rationalisme de Pascal was published in 2007.

Roberta Sabbath teaches at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. She focuses on Tanakh-inspired literary traditions, including in her current monograph-in-progress, Re-Membering the Body: The Jewish Sense of Wonder. She is the editor of Sacred Tropes: Tanakh, New Testament, and Qur’an as Literature and Culture (2009).

Baldine Saint Girons is professor of philosophy at the University of Paris X–Nanterre. She has recently published Lacte esthétique (2008), Les Marges de la nuit: Pour une autre histoire de la peinture (2006), Le Sublime de l’Antiquité à nos jours (2005), and Les Monstres du sublime: Hugo, le génie et la montagne (2005). Her specializations are philosophy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, aesthetics, and the philosophy of art.

Veronika Szántó has studied philosophy and biology. Her fields of interest include Western philosophy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the history and philosophy of life sciences, environmental thought, and bioethics. She is a junior researcher at the Institute for Philosophical Research at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest, and she is completing her PhD dissertation on the relationship between radical politics and natural philosophy in seventeenth-century England.

Miklós Vassányi is assistant professor in philosophy at Károli Reformed University (Faculty of Arts, Department of General Humanities) in Budapest. His dissertation is called “Anima mundi: The Rise of the World Soul Theory in Late German Enlightenment and Early Romanticism.” His specialization is in the history of early modern and of modern philosophy (Locke, Diderot, Schelling) and in the philosophy of religion (physico-theology, religious toleration).

Koen Vermeir is a fellow at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard University, and he is a fellow of the Fund of Scientific Research (Flanders), associated with the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven. His research has focused on seventeenth- and eighteenth-century natural philosophy, wondrous technologies, and magical thought. He has published articles in diverse books and journals, including the British Journal for the History of Science, Intellectual History Review, and Studies in History and Philosophy of Science, and has edited four books in the history of philosophy and aesthetics.